

The Legend of the 2030 BURDS

Deep in the pine thickets and lush valleys of Hall County, Georgia, grow a flock of small wild BURDS. With their wings proudly stretched, these distinctive creatures are no bigger than a hand yet large with personality and perpetual mischief.

Legend has it that the flock originally nested in the far reaches of barns and covered bridges, showing up from time to time. But, like many elusive creatures, these BURDS are heard but seldom seen, lesser still caught or tamed.

With population and growth, they spread their range, and some have come to roost at NGMC Gainesville and Braselton locations. These BURDS have a unique plaintive, sounding somewhat like a child's cry... "Find Me!"

The BURDS do love people but remain elusive – ever waiting for the slightest hint of human recognition.

What happens upon discovery is as mystical as the creatures themselves. With human detection, they freeze their movement, solidify their posture and maintain an eternal gaze and stance. Each discovered BURD becomes gilded in refined gold, reflecting the first gold discovered in 1836 in Hall County or perhaps the first mint established on Gainesville's Square.
